Course Description

The goal of this course is to develop effective interactive speaking and listening skills for academic and professional contexts. It is designed for advanced, motivated learners who want to improve their listening effectiveness, pronunciation accuracy, oral delivery, and overall presentation skills. Organized as a workshop, it is “hands-on,” which means class participation requires active preparation (reading, videos, exercises) done in advance, outside of class. Course work also includes frequent audio- and video recording for analysis and feedback in 4 main areas:

- Career related oral interactions expected of MIT students and graduates , such as impromptu speaking, job interviews, research presentations, and interactive teaching;
- Strategic expressions (gambits) and common idioms used in professional communication;
- Comprehensible pronunciation, stress and intonation patterns in global English;
- Critical listening for professional contexts and purposes (including signaling attentiveness and reading others’ non-verbal signals).

Enrollment priorities

First priority is for MIT graduate students who are currently teaching assistants and for whom the class is a requirement based on the English Evaluation Test (EET). Next are graduate students required or recommended to take the class based on the EET within the past two years, and undergraduates who are concentrating in ELS. Then come other students who have pre-registered for the course. Finally, if room remains, credit-seeking students for whom the class is not required or recommended by the Institute, with permission of the instructor. Limited to 15 students. No listeners.

Required Materials

- The Craft of Scientific Presentations (4nd ed.) by Michael Alley, Springer NY;
- Well Said (4th ed.) by Linda Grant, NGL/Cengage;
- The Torch or the Firehose: A Guide to Section Teaching
<https://ocw.mit.edu/resources/res-18-004-the-torch-or-the-firehose-a-guide-to-section-teaching-spring-2009/online-publication/>
- Career Development Handbook, available in Bldng. 12 Career Center and online: <https://capd.mit.edu/resources/career-handbook/>
- A folder in which to keep class materials and handouts – bring to each class.

Attendance, Participation and Homework

Skills improvement entails focus and ample practice in response to feedback, so this workshop requires consistent active participation. You can expect progress only if you attend regularly, do all the required assignments, and work steadily on your improvement goals. Grading is based heavily on work presented during class, so attendance, class preparation, and active participation are essential. Missing more than three excused classes or repeated lateness will negatively affect your grade. Should absence be unavoidable, you are still responsible for submitting any work due, and for finding out and doing what is due for the next class. Late assignments will not be accepted without prior permission from the instructor. If you think you may need to attend lectures or do work for other classes during our class time, you should postpone taking this course until you can give it the time and attention it requires.

Expected Learning Outcomes

The various communication tasks for which you will be responsible throughout the term are designed to address effective message organization/structure, body language and facial expressions as well as vocal delivery, professionally relevant idiomatic expressions, effective visual aids and Q & A, and generally improving your interactive listening and speaking skills. Effective interaction and communication includes not only awareness and consideration of your audience but also strategies for getting the floor, interrupting, participating in shaping discussion, getting clarification or confirmation, providing feedback as well as clarification, and generally actively negotiating meaning.

We aim to build your confidence as we develop your ability to assess your own as well as others' performances, give realistic and constructive feedback, effectively integrate the non-verbal and verbal aspects of professional communication, and manage anxiety as well as time constraints. We will also consider the influence of various levels of culture -- national, ethnic, regional, organizational, etc. -- on communication norms.
